

Pair of armchairs model 3758 A designed by Kaare Klint for Rud. Rasmussen Denmark, 1927

Marked.

Model designed in 1927 for the Danish Museum of Decorative Art, produced by Rud Rasmussen in the 1940's.

Kaare Klint was the father of Scandinavian modernism and is responsible for bringing Danish design to the centre stage. History has rarely seen such an impact left on the world of design by just one person, as Kaare Klint created a design language that would be spoken by designers for decades to come. The Danish golden age and Scandinavian modernism are periods that made Kaare Klint's name synonymous with icon.

Kaare Klint's appreciation for clean lines, simple ornamentation and an understanding of the human body translated into a design philosophy that has truly influenced the designs of today. Kaare Klint crafted pieces that embodied a perfect balance of form and function. This balance was achieved from his education as an apprentice in his father's architectural practice. This is where he was educated in classic realism and philosophical, as a lecturer Kaare Klint passed on his knowledge to students that would continue to inspire pieces based on his design philosophy.
