When Arne Vodder designed this low sideboard he also presented what is probably the most loved and iconic piece of Danish storage furniture from the 1950-1960s. The model 29A was the flagship in a series of storage furniture that shared many of the same features. The series included chests of drawers, low sideboards and high cabinets. Recurring features were the drawers with curved and carved fronts, another was the option of reversible sliding doors coloured on one side, and with wood veneer on the other. Just as the option of "shadow" paint on parts of the drawers. There was also the choice between metal legs with wooden "shoes", or a wooden leg frame. The series was made in two types of wood, rosewood and teak with the colours pale white and yellow available for the rosewood pieces and black for the teak pieces. However, some special orders were made
